Sam Mellinger: Chiefs owner Clark Hunt showing a ruthless side his silence often hides

Happy July 4th

BY MICHAEL MAROT
AP Sports Writer

Kansas City Chieks chairman and CEO Clark Hunt, right, talks with head coach Andy Reid before a game against the St. Louis Rams on October 24, 2014, at Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City, Mo.

The idea of Clark Hunt as the NFL's top owner is one that's easiest to the mind, not a situation that necessarily makes sense. He is simply a man who has figured out how to improve the organization that his family built, and that means he doesn't get too many headaches or sleepless nights. And that makes sense, too, considering that Hunt is 65 years old and has been in charge of the team since 1999.

In fact, Hunt has been so successful that he's become a symbol of hope for fans who once thought the team was beyond redemption. Under Hunt's leadership, the Chiefs have won three division titles and reached the playoffs four times, including two Super Bowls.

But Hunt's success hasn't come without challenges. He's had to deal with everything from NFL rule changes to player injuries to salary cap issues. And he's not afraid to make tough decisions, even if they mean sacrificing the present for the future.

Hunt's managerial style is as straightforward as it is effective. He's a hands-on owner who gets involved in every aspect of the team's operations, from personnel decisions to game-day strategy. And he's not afraid to make tough choices, even if they mean sacrificing the present for the future.

One example of Hunt's bold leadership came last season when he traded star quarterback Alex Smith for a third-round pick. The move was controversial at the time, but it paid off in a big way. Smith had a career-year, leading the Chiefs to a Super Bowl appearance.

Hunt's ability to make tough decisions has earned him the respect of his peers. He's known as a hard-nosed owner who's not afraid to sell off assets to get the job done. And he's not afraid to take risks, whether it's by signing free agents or drafting unproven talent.

Hunt's success is a testament to his ability to stay focused and make the right decisions. He's a man of few words, but he's not afraid to speak his mind when it counts. And that's what makes him such a great owner.

Clark Hunt - the man who's turned the Chiefs into a winner.

CHICAGO — Corey Kluber’s major league debut was put on pause.

The Cleveland Indians starting pitcher exploded the batter’s box with his first pitch and quickly left the game with an injury.

Manager Joe Girardi had no update on the injury immediately after Thursday night’s game against the Chicago White Sox, but the Yankees manager was the last person to see Kluber when he took the mound.

“I think he’s just downhill,” Girardi said. “And I think it’s pretty good. It’s not much of a concern. He’s able to Maybe we’ll see him next week.”

Girardi blamed lack of padding for rookie’s injury.

Girardi said the strikeout level is almost certainly concerning, as Walkers’ drop in runs and home run percentage this season, which is just .126 points below his ERA of 3.43.

Corey Kluber is looking like a Cy Young favorite after another midfield showing in Washington.

Kluber made his long-awaited return to the mound for the first time in two years and the first time he has taken the mound for the Yankees in almost a year since being on the disabled list for months of rehabilitation.

Tajun Walker, ATL - Walker’s performance on the mound was starting to look like a toss-up this spring.

Since May 16, Walker has a 1.46 ERA in 15 1/3 innings, which is the 11th-lowest mark among relievers. While Walker’s ERA is down this year, his save percentage is up. He has given up one run (seven earned) and has 13 saves. Walker’s VAIP is up from last year’s 2.44 ERA in 2016, so it is looking better. Even though he is in just 29 2/3 innings, he has 41 strikeout attempts and is around 10.0 strikeouts per 9 innings.
